A legérdekesebb dolog a tegnapi újság, mondja Örkény valahol (vagy legalábbis valami hasonlót mond). Miközben egyesek hosszú és elgondolkodtató posztokat írnak bonyolult dolgokról, mi csak fogjuk meg a boldogabbik és bulvárosabb végét a dolognak!

Kevés szöveg, sok kép, minimális megmondás. Lapszemle a harmincas évek végér?l és a negyvenesek elejér?l.

Világpolitika két színes élelmiszer-, cigaretta-, rövidital-, autó- vagy iparcikk-reklám között, egyel?re biztos távolságban az eseményekt?l.

GERMANY UNCOVERS WORLD'S BIGGEST MOBILE FIELD GUN

The exact degree of might of Nazi Germany's armed forces is a world mystery, second only to the Soviet's army. The German method of keeping the world guessing is to act as if they were keeping a Frankenstein under wraps, occasionally to let slip one startling secret. One such appeared in the review of the German Third Army Corps for Hungary's visiting Regent Horthy, Aug. 15 (LIFE, Sept. 18). It was a mobile gun with what looked like a 48-ft. barrel, a 10-in. caliber, the biggest mobile field gun ever seen in the world. It rolled past the reviewing stand at 30 miles an hour, preceded by four truckloads of parts. Foreign observers figured it might shoot 80 miles. Photographs were not permitted out of Germany. LIFE reproduces this picture (Nr. 203) from the monday (Montag) Berliner Zeitung (B.Z.).

3) 1939. szeptember 11: nagy cikk Göringr?l (van Goebbelsr?l is). Az utolsó fotó: egy strand, ahol ki van táblázva, hogy tilos Göringet fotózni, a képaláírásban a magyarázat.

Göring's fear that people will laugh at his 240-lb. bulk led to the posting of this sign at a North Sea bathing beach. It reads: "Warning! Photographing General Göring and his wife while bathing entails immediate confiscation of camera and films."

FOR THE RECORD

RUSSIA UNVEILS INVASION OF FINLAND

FULL-LENGTH MOVIE CALLED "MANNERHEIM LINE" SHOWS RUSSIAN WEAPONS AND TACTICS

When Russia invaded Finland last Nov. 30, it abruptly ended nearly all communication with the outside "capitalistic" world. It stopped sending out pictures and movies. It clapped a ferocious censorship on correspondents. Last week this pall of darkness over Russia was lifted for the first time when Moscow released a remarkable movie record of the Russian attack on Finland's Mannerheim Line. Below and on following pages LIFE reproduces noteworthy scenes from the film.

Propaganda though it is, Mannerheim Line is a revealing record. It proves that the Russian Army has a formidable arsenal of weapons, and that it knows how to use them. It shows the Russian Army as the nearest approach to the German Army yet developed. It shows a basic reorganization of planes, artillery, tanks and infantry. It demonstrates the appalling task which the Russians successfully executed: a vast mechanized attack in arctic weather. It shows the faces of the Russian soldiers, dull, tough and disciplined.

Above all, this movie demonstrates again the heroic feat of Finland's 17 divisions in holding out 105 days against Russia's 45 divisions. Human valor still counts for something. It is noteworthy that Russia has yet released no movie of the fighting in northern Finland, of the bloody defeats at Salla, Suomussalmi and Pitkaranta. There long Russian tank columns were caught by the Finns on narrow forest roads and butchered. The Russian mistake was to try a blitzkrieg in an impossible forest. Another mistake was to think that the Finnish "proletariat" would rise and welcome the Red juggernaut. (The Russian columns even brought along beast bands.)

After it had learned its lesson, the Red Army went to work the hard way, hammering at the Mannerheim Line in the south. It moved in mid-winter against appalling hazards. It had no "Hitler luck," no "Hitler weather." The great guns were advanced over bad ground in bitter weather. Brief thaws bogged the ground under them. Snow blanketed bombers and observation planes on the ground. The Finns hid their fortifications, concentrations, munitions dumps, under the endless Finnish forests, so that the Russians were obliged to shell them with a long, searching and wasteful bombardment. The Finns moved rapidly and struck with surprise over their own well-loved fatherland. They fought savagely and showed an extraordinary aversion to surrendering, even against heavy odds. Finns who had surrendered were exhibited by the Russians like rare pearls. Watching from the Finnish side, the world regarded the Russians with contempt.

The contempt was undeserved. The Red Army is no joke, these pictures prove. It does not match the German in staff work and weapons. It does not match the U. S. Army in organization and morale. But it knows how to fight and how to die.

Hitler Jokes

Sirs:

I read in your issue of May 6 several good jokes about Hitler. I'm sending you two more that have known a great deal of success in Brazil.

Hitler was laughing at his friend Admiral Horthy, dictator of Hungary: "Why do you call yourself Admiral? Hungary has no seaport and no navy."

Horthy laughed too: "That is right. Titles are nonsense. Don't you have in Germany a Minister of Justice?"

Hitler went to the country and saw a beautiful ox. He asked the farmer what food he gave to the ox. The farmer told what he did to keep the animal fat. Hitler threatened him with severe punishment if he continued to waste food on an ox. One month later a Nazi came and asked the farmer again about what food he gave to his ox. The farmer said he only gave him garbage.

The Nazi was furious that valuable food was being wasted in the garbage.

The next time a Nazi came for checking him the farmer played safe: "I don't know what my ox eats. Every day I give him three reichsmarks and he goes and eats where he pleases and what he pleases."

P.s. Enélkül a kép nélkül én se érteném, miért gondolták egyesek viccesnek Göring egyenruháját (kép a fenti cikkb?l). Igen, b?rmellény b?rövvel és díszt?rrel és nyakkend?vel, otthonosan. Lásd M. Tournier, A Rémkirály cím? regényét.
